Working alongside Local Government

Local Government is the closest level of government to community and is therefore best placed to work with service providers in identifying local issues. By working collaboratively with service providers and other levels of government, Local Government can advocate for their region and work towards improving outcomes for children and families at a localised level.

While the nature of service delivery among Local Governments varies, they have an essential role in providing local services to community including the provision of public spaces, development and maintenance of parks and playgrounds, provision of public libraries and recreation facilities and delivering services to residents.

By working effectively and collaboratively with Early Years Networks, Local Governments can obtain information and feedback from key stakeholders working directly with their community and identify important local issues. This enriches a better understanding of their community; makes for more informed decision making; improves advocacy for their local community, leading to achieving improved outcomes for children and families.

Many Early Years Networks across the state are Chaired by Officers from their Local Government Area (LGA), usually from the Community Services Directorate. This format provides strong administration for Early Years Networks, with LGA's committing time and resources to this vital collaborative approach in identifying and addressing local community needs.

For Networks that are not coordinated by their Local Government, it is valuable to build a partnership with the LGA to communicate and work towards common ambitions.

To establish a positive working relationship with your Local Government, you can:

1. Find out who the key contact person is in your LGA for early years projects, community services or community development.
2. Send a personal invite to this key contact person to join your Network. If this is not an option, reach out to the CEO, Mayor or your local Councillor.

3. Add your LGA to your mailing list and invite to meetings. Ask them to be a guest speaker at a meeting to talk about what the LGA's early years programs or focus are.
4. Become familiar with your LGA's Strategic Community Plan.
5. Communicate how joining your Network can benefit the LGA in meeting common targets, improving outcomes for children and families and addressing key performance indicators in their community plans.

A collaborative approach to Early Years Networks can ensure all parties are equally contributing and benefiting from the information and resources shared and the knowledge gained.
