Marital Status

Discrimination

It is unlawful under the Equal Opportunity Act 1984 (the Act) to discriminate against a person because of their marital status.

For the purposes of the Act marital status refers to being single, married, married but living apart from one's spouse, divorced, widowed or the de facto partner of another person.

Direct marital status discrimination occurs when a person is treated less favourably because of their marital status compared to another person of a different marital status, in the same or similar circumstances.

Indirect marital status discrimination is when a requirement, condition or practice that is the same for everyone has an unfair effect on someone because of their marital status, and is unreasonable in the circumstances.

Where does the protection apply?

Under the Act it is unlawful to discriminate against a person because of their marital status, in certain areas of public life, including:

- Work in some instances
- Education
- Access to places and vehicles
- Provision of goods, services and facilities
- Accommodation
- Clubs
- Disposal of land or estate
- Application forms
- Advertisements
- Sport in some instances
- Insurance in some instances.

Responsibilities

Organisations must ensure they provide a working environment and services that are free from marital status discrimination and they must take all reasonable steps to prevent it from happening or they may be held responsible for their employees' actions.

A person causing, instructing, inducing, helping or permitting another person to do something unlawful is the same as doing it, for the purpose of the Act.

Making a complaint

A person who believes they have been discriminated against because of their marital status can lodge a complaint with the Commissioner. The onus of proof lies with the person making the complaint.

The incident or incidents in the complaint must have occurred within the 12 months previous to the date you lodge your complaint.

In some circumstances the Commissioner may rule there is good reason, or good cause, to include incidents that occurred more than 12 months before the complaint is lodged.

The Commissioner for Equal Opportunity provides information about the Act, investigates and conciliates complaints, conducts community education and training and develops programs to promote equal opportunity.

Examples of marital status discrimination

A de facto couple was denied accommodation because the landlord said he wanted to rent the property to a married couple.

000

A transport company refused to employ an unmarried female applicant as office manager, even though she was the best candidate, because the Human Resources Manager thought her being single would make her a target for harassment.

Ω

After a female customer of a health insurance company got married and notified the fund of her changed marital status, the company made all refund cheques payable to her husband which meant she required her husband's signature to cash the cheques.

000

A financial organisation indirectly discriminated against a recent divorcee when they refused a loan application on the ground of residential instability. It failed to take into account her residential instability was caused by her recent divorce and did not affect her ability to repay the loan.

Disclaimer

The material in this brochure is not intended to be legal advice. The Commissioner expressly disclaims any liability in respect to anything done or not done to any person in reliance upon any of the contents of this publication.

> The Government of Western Australia www.wa.gov.au

March 2025

Exceptions

There are some instances where it is not unlawful to discriminate against a person because of their marital status, and these exceptions include:

- Accommodation provided in a private household or by a religious, charitable or voluntary body
- Accommodation provided for employees
- Accommodation provided for aged persons
- Partnerships of less than six people
- Employment, when the job is one of two that will be held by a married couple or partners in a de facto relationship
- Employment in a religious, educational institution
- The provision of education by a religious organisation
- Residential care of children
- Disposal of an estate or interest in land or by way of
- Measures intended to achieve equality or meet special needs
- Superannuation and insurance, based on statistical evidence
- The provision of charitable benefits
- Admission as a member of a voluntary organisation
- The ordination of priests or ministers of religion.

If an individual or organisation relies upon an exception under the Act when a complaint is made against them, they must justify the use of that exception to the Commissioner for Equal Opportunity.

How to contact the Commission

How to follow the Commission

@WA.EOC

@EOC.WA

By telephone

General enquiries: 9216 3900 Training courses: 9216 3927 Country callers: 1800 198 149

Address

Albert Facey House 469 Wellington Street PERTH WA 6000

By email

eoc@eoc.wa.gov.au

By visiting our website

www.eoc.wa.gov.au

Interpreter service: 13 14 50

© Commissioner for Equal Opportunity